Dear [Redacted]

25X1

Your request to the Deputy Director of Training and Education dated 15 October 1982 regarding DoD mobilization training requirements has been reviewed by interested components of this Agency. CIA will not have the capability to substantially expand HUMINT training for Department of Defense employees during extended contingency situations and wartime mobilization. DoD can, of course, use the current resources allocated to HUMINT training at our training base in any manner it chooses. CIA is not in a position to assure DoD of an expanded HUMINT training program in war and prewar situations.

In response to your question if CIA can provide advisors/instructors for a DoD clandestine case officer course to be held at a non-CIA training site, the answer is possibly. For example, if the timing of your course does not conflict with other CIA training commitments, it may be possible for CIA to provide a mix of trained, experienced annuitants and staff employees to handle such a course. We cannot make a firm commitment until we know the dates of the training, site locations and instructor requirements.
